RIGHTS OF NATURALIZED CITIZENS DEFINED.

Important Instructions from the State Department.

(Washington Special to Boston Journal.)

Henry C. Hall, Esq., Boston:

DEAR SIR—In reply to your letter of the 17th inst., I have to say that it is manifestly to the interest of this country that attach to persons naturalized in accordance with the provisions of the laws of the United States the same rights of protection which are accorded to persons born within the limits of the United States. It is also manifestly to the interest of this country that the rights of persons naturalized in accordance with the laws of the United States should be respected by the authorities of the country from which they originally came. You are, therefore, at liberty to say that it is the intention of this Department to claim for naturalized citizens of the United States the same protection which is accorded to native-born citizens, and to insist that they shall not be subjected to any other or greater penalties than those imposed upon native-born citizens.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

HAMILTON FISH.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOAT RACE.

New York, August 28.

The Paris's London special says: The race is generally conceded to have been portentous fiasco, and comments on both sides. The time occupied by Clasped was twenty-two minutes and forty-five seconds, being two days less than the record time of the course a few days ago. The distance rowed in a little less than four miles and three furlongs. The tide was not fair, but the tide was with the Harvards the first three of the four furlongs. The Harvards' rowing was very fine, and they have made great improvements since they last rowed on the Thames. Many think Harvards have been over-confident, and that they would have better efforts to take the Oxford's measure. At Hammersmith's bridge was over-confidence, and the Harvards, who had previously been forty-two to forty, and twenty the Oxfords, by a spasmodic effort, increased their speed without reference to the rest. A little further on they were beaten, about half way, the Oxfords, by a spasmodic effort of their own, took the Harvards' water, and all of Harvard's efforts to recover the Oxfords' with were in vain. As Chiswick came in sight, the Harvards were visibly distressed, and Burnham throwing water over his shirts, and sometimes, on views the labor and suffering of Harvard. It was now perceived that the race was lost by the Harvards, though it was fought out. At first, was stated to gain the Oxfords' side. When the goal was reached, the Harvard crew, after a moment's rest, drew up to the side of the Oxford boat and applauded the victors by clapping their hands. The Oxfords acknowledged this by shaking of their hats.

There are various theories as to the cause of Harvard's failure. It is rumored that their boat leaked. Most lately vegetarian, but it is not true. Burnham for two days before the race was ill with dysentery, and was not in a fit condition to row. Burnham for not having English coaching. Burnham for not steering; but many good judges declare that the Harvards' style of rowing is the best of the two between the English universities, and that Harvard's defeat was due entirely to their inferior physique.

London, August 28.

A corrected sketch of the race with the Harvard passed Barnes' Bridge only two lengths ahead, including the bridge, by which time it had increased to a length. The Oxfords were the Harvards' water, and all of Harvard's efforts to recover the Oxfords' with were in vain. At Chiswick, when the Harvards passed, the Harvards were visibly distressed, and Burnham throwing water over his shirts, and sometimes, on views the labor and suffering of Harvard. It was now perceived that the race was lost by the Harvards, though it was fought out. At first, was stated to gain the Oxfords' side. When the goal was reached, the Harvard crew, after a moment's rest, drew up to the side of the Oxford boat and applauded the victors by clapping their hands, and the Oxfords acknowledged this by shaking of their hats.

There are various theories as to the cause of Harvard's failure. It is rumored that their boat leaked. Most lately vegetarian, but it is not true. Burnham for not steering; but many good judges declare that the Harvards' style of rowing is the best of the two between the English universities, and that Harvard's defeat was due entirely to their inferior physique.

Comments of the London Press.

The pool generally estimate at length of the race at yesterday. The Times, reviewing the contest, says: "The inferiority of the Harvards to the Oxfords was most complete, both in style and power. Their victory was undoubtedly a great surprise, though in advance for the distance between the Harvards and the end of the race. While the Americans fairly defeated, they did not exhibit anything that can allow of any claim to the championship. They were very, and if the Oxfords had put forth their full power, they could have rowed to the end. The Americans have no reason to be ashamed of their defeat, and, whatever may be said of their style, they have proved themselves to be good oarsmen. The Americans hope for a good deal from the future, and we wish them success in the start to the finish."

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "The International boat race has exceeded all expectations. The Americans have been beaten by the Oxfords by a good deal more than they had expected
